This book provides the basics of both financial and managerial accounting. Financial accounting provides primarily monetary information about business activities that result in the financial statements that are published for use by people outside the business. Managerial accounting provides monetary and nonmonetary information about business activities that result in supporting details for the financial statements or that provide information for internal organizational users to plan, control, or make decisions about operations. It is not intended to be a comprehensive volume in either financial or managerial accounting, but an introduction for non-business majors. The book takes a user orientation, steering clear of detailed, technical discussions. Many interesting examples from the travel industry are integrated throughout to catch the reader's interest and to apply concepts to companies they may know.

Shows in a step-by-step manner how an operational review should be conducted. Demonstrates the differences between an operational and financial audit. Details how to identify which organizational systems are detrimental to a corporation's growth. Shows how to judge the results and make recommendations to management. Provides blank and sample forms required for conducting a comprehensive operational review.

DOD contractors' responses to our survey indicate that they have millions of dollars in overpayments and underpayments on their records, and based on DFAS Columbus records, they are continuing to refund overpayments about $488 million in fiscal year 2001. Contractors cited progress payment liquidation errors as a primary reason for the overpayments and underpayments. They usually did not include debt due to contract administration actions—the reason for the majority of contractor refunds according to DFAS Columbus records—in their reported overpayments. Additional overpayments and underpayments could be identified when audits of the over 3,200 contracts requiring some level of reconciliation, as of September 30, 2001, are completed by DFAS Columbus. Contractor debt, regardless of cause, is likely to continue due to DOD's complex contract management and payments processes. Even when payment discrepancies are identified, they are not always promptly resolved. DOD has taken actions to address problems with contractor overpayments. In addition to its contract audit functions and as part of a broad-based program to assist DCMA and DFAS, DCAA is auditing at least 190 large DOD contractors to identify overpayments and ensure that contractors have adequate internal controls for prompt identification and reporting of overpayments. This type of activity can be considered part of a recovery audit program. DFAS Columbus has implemented procedures to better identify potential duplicate payments before the invoices are paid and to determine and monitor the causes of the duplicate payments. As part of its long-term solution to contract payment problems, DOD also is implementing the Standard Procurement System and the Defense Procurement Payment System to replace current contract administration and payment systems. However, the full implementation of these systems has been delayed and their success is uncertain.
