Aging as a Social Construction. While aging itself is a biological process, what it means to be " young " or " old " is socially constructed. This means that there is no inherent cultural meaning to the biological process of aging. Rather, cultures imbue youth and age with meanings. Aging is perceived differently around the world, demonstrating its social construction.

A Global Perspective on Aging | Boundless Sociology
Today, most scientists think that aging is caused by a complex interplay of different factors, including genetics, programmed physiological changes to our cells, and behavioral and environmental influences. Much of this process is unavoidable. In a sense, our cells are "coded" to die off as time passes. For example, consider the role of telomeres.
