Posterior Urethral Reconstruction. Posterior urethral reconstruction is a surgical procedure for males that is sometimes needed after trauma to the urethra. The urethra is the tube that carries urine out of the body from the bladder through the penis. The surgery is most often performed for urethral stricture (or narrowing) after trauma, such as a pelvic fracture.

Urethral reconstructive surgery, or urethroplasty, is the only "definitive" treatment option for urethral strictures. It is usually reserved for strictures that are severe or non-responsive to endoscopic management. Few Urologists perform these procedures as training in them is hard to come by. Dr. Rapoport is one of a handful of urologists in Canada with fellowship (subspecialty) training in urethral reconstruction.

~~Urethral Stricture Treatment, Symptoms & Surgery Recovery~~
Urethroplasty is a surgery where the urethra is reconstructed to cure problems like urethral strictures. The types of surgeries are varied and depend upon the location, cause, and length of the stricture. Most surgeries take between three to six hours to complete. An incision is made over the area of the stricture in the penis, scrotum, or perineum (the area between the scrotum and the anus).
